Market Report

Miners drag the JSE into the red in June

Most world markets retreated from recent highs and closed June on a disappointing note, with modest gains or month-on-month declines. This as market jitters emerged on the back of fears over the highly contagious Delta variant, while investors also took profits as the first half of 2021 came to a close. South African equities was no exception and had a poor month, with the All-Share Index losing 2.4% but still up an impressive 11.5% year-to-date. Resource stocks were the main detractors, as the sector gave up 6.4%. Given the broader decline in commodities, this was largely to be expected. Large-cap commodities firms were the biggest detractors: Amplats lost a massive 9.3% month-on-month, while Anglo American and Glencore recorded losses of 7.9% and 5.2%. Financials were 3% lower, but Industrials bucked the trend slightly, with the subindex closing a modest 0.4% higher. Naspers and Prosus also recorded monthly declines of 1.7% and 1.8% respectively. Given their large market share, the drag on the index is substantial. The SA Listed Property Index had a great month, recording a 3.2% rebound (+15.5% since the beginning of the year). Looking at the top-20 shares by market cap, BHP Group, now the biggest company on the JSE by market cap, advanced 0.4% in June, while British American Tobacco and Richemont posted gains of 5.2% and 4.1% month-on-month, respectively.

In local economic news, May's annual headline inflation, as measured by the consumer price index (CPI), jumped 5.2% year-on-year vs April's 4.4%. The higher print was widely expected and comes off the very low base recorded in May 2020, when fuel prices were low. Core inflation (which excludes food and non-alcoholic beverages, fuel, and energy) came in at 3.1% year-on-year, much lower than the headline rate. This hints at the notable impact that fuel and food inflation has had on overall (headline) inflation levels, and subsequently also the effects of supply-side price pressures on domestic inflation, with domestic demand-side price pressures remaining muted. The rebound in fuel prices especially would have contributed to May's spike, with the petrol price falling to R12.22/litre in May 2020 and recovering to R17.23/litre by May 2021. Overall, this latest print affirms the idea that inflation in SA will prove transitory – although it has taken inflation to above the 4.5% mid-point of the SA Reserve Bank's inflation target range of between 3% and 6% for the first time since February 2020 (when inflation stood at 4.6% year-on-year).

On the pandemic front, President Cyril Ramaphosa announced that SA will move to amended Level-4 lockdown (effective since 28 June) due to the surge in infections caused by the highly contagious Delta COVID-19 variant. The restrictions (initially set to remain in place for 14 days before being reassessed) include banning alcohol sales, prohibiting indoor and outdoor gatherings, limiting funeral attendance to no more than 50 people, and with curfew now starting at 9PM and ending at 4AM. The latest Department of Health data show that as of 30 June, the total number of confirmed COVID-19 cases since the start of the pandemic stood at 1.97mn vs end-May's 1.67mn cases. By 30 June, 3,026,636 people had been vaccinated. On 30 June, there were 19,506 new cases in SA – the fifth highest daily rate of new infections recorded so far.

The weaker dollar, SA's strong terms of trade supporting a current account surplus, and lower US interest rates, were all supportive of a stronger rand in the first half of June. However, the Fed signalling that there could be two rate hikes in 2023, weighed on the local unit resulting in the currency trading with a bearish tone and closing the month c. 3.8% lower (+2.9% year-to-date).

Tech benefits with the rotation back into structural growth stocks

Global markets appear to be on an upward trajectory, fuelled by the reopening of major economies and the roll-out of vaccines. The MSCI World closed 1.5% higher, but Emerging Markets (EM) lagged. US markets outstripped their Developed Market (DM) peers. The S&P500 gained 2.3% for the month, moving to new highs and closing out a fifth consecutive quarterly advance. However, the contributors of those returns were quite different to the previous few months, which have been dominated by companies benefitting from post-pandemic economic normalisation (generally cyclical companies or those geared towards industries which suffered most during the pandemic). Instead, June saw the return of the “pandemic-beneficiaries” (predominantly technology businesses), with the NYSE Fang Index (comprised of the 10 largest US-listed technology businesses) outperforming the broader market by about 7% for the month. The economic recovery is boosting traditional growth stocks as well as adding momentum to the healthcare and consumer discretionary sectors.

A key catalyst for the rotation back into structural growth companies and away from cyclical growth companies was the US Federal Reserve (Fed) meeting in June, where the Fed released the quarterly updated forecasts from its members. US inflation has been running hotter, with the May reading indicating a 5% year-on-year increase. The Fed has to some extent remained optimistic, expressing the belief that the increase is transitory. The latest Federal Open Market Committee meeting, however, suggests that the hawks are rising. The median committee member now expects two rate hikes in 2023, whereas only three months ago the consensus was for no rate hikes. Investors interpreted the Fed’s change of tone as slightly bearish for longer-term growth and, besides catalysing a rotation into structural growth stocks, the US interest rate curve flattened as long-term rates drifted lower, with US 10-year bond yields ending the month 0.13% down at 1.46%.

The flatter US yield curve acted as a headwind to financial stocks (S&P 500 Financial -3% for the month), with only S&P materials companies faring worse (-5.3% in June) in the face of generally softer commodity prices. The exception to the poor month for commodities was oil, with Brent crude oil ending the month 8% stronger as increasing demand continues to be met with a conservative supply response by the major oil-producing nations.

Emerging markets were also held back by the rotation into growth companies, with EM equities barely edging out a positive return for the month (MSCI EM +0.2% for the month). The exception to a soft month for EM countries was Brazil and Russia, both of which benefitted from their high exposure to oil companies, which rallied along with the strong oil price. On the currency front, the US dollar had a strong month against most currencies, with Brazil again the outlier, as the Brazilian real rallied 5% against the US dollar in June. Brazil’s latest GDP growth data exceeded expectations and economists have started increasing their estimates for the country’s future economic growth.

Global re-opening continues as vaccination programs across most of the developed world near full adult vaccination levels. The second half of the year should see continued vaccination roll out and reopening’s with the threat of the Delta variant creating more urgency and speed to vaccinate. A key message is that mobility and activity can bounce even in the presence of variants, provided that vaccination programs are advancing, even if incomplete. With most other countries far behind the US, there is a strong case for the pace of vaccination to accelerate further with EM economies to soon enter the steepening “S” vaccination pace seen across the US and Europe.

Latest Results

Looking back, FY21 was a year of historic extremes that unequivocally affirmed the resilience of the group’s business model. Stor-Age’s exceptional performance in unprecedented times has cemented the group’s capability to outperform on a sustainable basis.

The social and economic disruption caused by the pandemic has given rise to a new demand driver for self-storage. Factors driving this demand include work/study-from-home, home improvements, migration in and out of metropolitan markets, disruption to businesses, employment insecurity and an acceleration of e-commerce. In these circumstances, mobility tends to increase as people relocate for better economic prospects or more affordable living situations and businesses are forced to quickly adapt, often meaning a need for flexibility in their space (and therefore storage) requirements. In addition, businesses that have pivoted to online sales require product storage space and/or a distribution point for their customers.

After the initial setbacks in the first half of the year, move-ins accelerated rapidly from both traditional and new drivers of demand, resulting in record move-ins and occupancy for the year. The portfolio closed at 90.1% occupancy (2020: 83.8%) with a year-on-year increase of 28 500m². Like-for-like organic rental income, excluding the impact of acquisitions, grew by 8.6% and 6.3% year-on-year in SA and the UK respectively. An intensified focus on working capital and cash collections yielded positive results. The company collected over 98% and 99% of rentals due in SA and the UK, respectively, and bad debt losses accounted for under 1.0% of group rental income.

Dividend

A dividend of 52.00 cents per share was declared by the directors for the interim period ended 30 September 2020. A further dividend of 54.08 cents per share was declared for the 6-month period ended 31 March 2021. The dividend for the full year amounts to 106.08 cents per share (2020: 112.05 cents per share).

Latest Results

Facebook demonstrated the strength of their advertising revenue with 46% growth in the first quarter of 2021 (compared to Q1 2020), which was driven by a 30% year-over-year increase in the average price per ad and a 12% increase in the number of ads delivered. Management expect that advertising revenue growth will continue to be primarily driven by price during the rest of 2021. Management continue to expect increased ad targeting headwinds in 2021 from regulatory and platform changes, notably the recently-launched iOS 14.5 update, which is expected to begin having an impact in the second quarter. There is also continuing uncertainty around the viability of transatlantic data transfers in light of recent European regulatory developments, and like companies across a wide range of industries.

Management expect 2021 total expenses to be in the range of $70-73 billion, updated from their prior outlook of $68-73 billion. The year-over-year growth in expenses is driven by investments in technical and product talent, infrastructure, and consumer hardware-related costs. Facebook remain committed to investing for long-term growth and management's expense outlook reflects the underlying strength of the business and the compelling investment opportunities seen across their products, including consumer hardware.

Dividend

Facebook has never paid a dividend and management have said that they do not expect to pay a dividend in the foreseeable future. This is inline with the Internet Services industry. The free cash flow the business generates is reinvested into the company for long term sustainable growth.
